	Tiny parcels of land in our towns are not sustainable in a world where we are supposed to be reducing dependence in fossil fuels. People can't have a vege garden in 150m2 section and therefore become more dependant on mass transported food. More importantly, the massive increase in lot size in rural areas is also not sustainable or justifiable. With land prices so high, and the move away from fossil fuel models, we need to encourage small (human) scale permaculture/agriculture ventures for our local market. 20ha is too big and blocks most people out. Please consider this more carefully before blindly following this UN driven national directive, which is not going to help our local community.
